Particulars of the Rescue.

St. John's N. Y., July 19.—Norman, the pilot of the Thetis, who was the first man to enter Lieutenant Greely's camp, gives a graphic report of the rescue.

At eight o'clock on the evening of June 22, having previously found a record three miles north of Cape Sabine, we proceeded to a steam launch to the spot indicated as the camping-ground of the Greely party.

As we approached the point, we saw a man staggering down the hillside toward an ice fort. He held a small flag-staff in his hand attached to which was a piece of a handkerchief.

As soon as the steam launch struck, Captain Ash of the Bear and myself jumped out. The man proved to be Sergeant Leach, one of the Greely party. He had a haggard, ghastly look and was hardly able to stand, and muttered out his words. We asked him how all the hands were. He replied: "There are 'SEVEN OF US LEFT'."

"I ran up immediately to the place where he pointed out the camp. Captain Ash and Lieutenant Colwell went back to the launch to bring some pemmican biscuits and stimulating drink. When I reached within a few yards of the tent I cried out: 'Cheer up, Greely!'

"He that you, Norman?" faintly replied Greely, who knew my voice, although three years had elapsed since I bade him farewell on the ice.

"A fierce storm was blowing and the tent had fallen or its wretched occupants. I cut and tore it open, entered, and saw my old comrades huddled in the midst of the camp.

Sergeant Ellison lay there with his hands and feet exposed, and caused by frost the first of the previous year. Steward Peabody lay listlessly in front of Greely. Private Connel pointed at his comrades as they lay. We left nothing behind but some clothing and a few cans of wet food on which Greely and his men had been living for weeks.

"The exhausted chief of the party, skin out in small pieces about the size of a cent piece, had been stowed and converted into a kind of broth with some shrimps and seaweed. This repulsive stew had formed the sole diet for Lieutenant Greely and his comrades."

A Public Reception to be Tendered to Lieutenant Greely.

New Bedford, Mass., July 19.—The reception to be given by this city to Lieutenant Greely is the topic of conversation everywhere.

"Prominent features will be a civic and military procession, at which the opportunity to take the hand of the commander and hear the story of his Arctic hardships from his own lips will be given. Already New Bedford Commandery has called a meeting to consider the matter of the reception."

Caring for the Home-Comers.

Washington, D. C., July 19.—The acting Secretaries of War and Navy will, by the advice of General Hazen and the Surgeon General, advise Lieutenant Greely and Captain Schley, to remain at St. John's N. Y., the Lock City, a settlement in Maine, where they can be joined by their families, and become thoroughly acclimated before returning to the city.

Talk of Another Arctic Investigation.

Washington, D. C., July 19.—There is talk among the geologists to-day of the possibility of appointing another general party of inquiry to investigate the failure of the Arctic expedition, but as Secretary Lincoln and Chandler are both absent, the story is not generally credited.

OUTRAGE AND MURDER.

The Awful Crime of a Black Scoundrel Against a Little Girl.

Having Buried the Body of His Victim in a Creek, He Reveals His Grave to His Captors.

A Mob Filled, the Coroner Filled, and Justice Robbed of Her Claims.

Richmond, Tex., July 18.—On Wednesday, as Hannah Burton, aged twelve, was returning from school, she was met by Webb Horton, an ex-convict, who attacked, outraged and then killed her, burying the body of John Horton, aged twelve, in a creek.

He confessed, and took the party to the spot where he had buried the body.

The officers started to Richmond with the prisoner, with his hands tied behind him and a rope around his neck.

They were met by an infuriated crowd, who took the prisoner, tied him to a tree and shot fifteen times at him.

When he fell, apparently dead, they took the rope off and left him. After the party left, Horton got up and went home, dressed in his usual clothes.

The Coroner went out to hold an inquest, but the remains had disappeared. Officers are now hunting for Horton.

HOW IT LOOKS TO HIS ENEMIES.

The Cincinnati Enquirer on Blaine's Letter of Acceptance.

CINCINNATI, O., July 17.—The Enquirer of this morning says that Mr. Blaine's letter of acceptance was a disappointment, inasmuch as it lacks the rhetoric, warmth and brilliancy which everybody expected from the magnetic candidate.

Mr. Blaine no doubt regards this as an occasion for statements solemnly rather than for gorgeous display, that application of statistics to the defense of the policy of protection is overwrought, and that the theory that a high tariff is the secret of all our prosperity will not be agreeable to free trade Republicans.

THE DANGER OF TALKING.

A Man Who Asks for a Commission Gets a Clipping.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., July 19.—Mr. John Jarrett, who was recently appointed Chief of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, but who has met with a formidable obstacle in securing his commission, and has been waiting for it for some time.

Honor in Politics

EDITORS REPUBLICAN—Some editors, it seems, can never rise above the detestable habit of putting off, in a summary and mad, the wrong place of argument, expecting that such slanderous and untrue attacks upon the people of Alameda County and other Democratic organs are launching forth on the campaign of dirt, seeking with the scolding proclivities of hungry jackals to find something in the record of Mr. Blaine through which they may blacken his character. I do not regard Mr. Blaine as perfection by any means, but he has a record of usefulness to the government, where he has exhibited great statesmanship and brilliant powers; and the efforts now being made to belittle that brilliant record will be rebuked as it serves to be. The time has come when this country is too enlightened to be hoodwinked by slanders against a blackguardism, and the sooner political tricksters are taught this lesson the better. It seems, however, that Democratic editors cannot raise above this shameful billingsgate. The caricatured Lincoln as a buffoon until a Democratic bullet gave him martyr's crown! To day the homage of the poorest negro child in America is more sacred, revered and honored than the slanderous edition of the Democratic convention of 1860 which declared the war a failure! 1860 they slandered and vilified the immortal Garfield by writing the figures 320 before every Republican name in the darkness of the night. Those dingy old knaves who were ashamed to show their faces, as they ought still to be ashamed of their dirty work. It is largely the same crowd now who would rise to power on the capital of political stench!

If the Democratic party has a candidate then present the case fairly and squarely, and the people will listen to them, but if they have nothing better than vilification, the people will conclude that it is the old story of abuse, negro hunting, abolition hating and free whiskey, with the same hungry crowd behind it all who do not expect to vote for either Mr. Blaine or Mr. Cleveland, for reasons which are my own, but I would give fair warning to all parties that blackguardism is not going to win this contest. Yours, &c., 11 Candor.

Blaine's Personal Appearance

St Paul Pioneer Press

"Mr Blaine is far better looking than the cartoons or campaign portraits make him," remarked a friend of mine who saw him this Summer just before the convention "He is a handsome man than he was to be years ago in all the elements of strength and dignified physiognomy. Age has completely silvered his hair and beard, and this, with his powerful complexion, make a wonderful pleasant and interesting face. His facial muscles have still that sufficient appearance which made him look, even twenty years ago, so vigorous in debate. His eyes shine keenly over the baggy underlids that he observed in men who were afflicted with disease—the common eye disease of the public men. He is, however, so healthy to day as an acrobat, as makes me think whenever I see him of a steam engine of 100 horse power. He is a magnificent reservoir of power."

Almost every person has some form of scrofulous poison latent in his veins. Hence the gratitude of those who have been cured of these diseases that Ayer's Sarsaparilla will throughout eradicate the poison from the system. 14

after, is to be found in the process for the removal of the stains upon the Lac- bled statue at Munich. This substance, which was used in past ages for the staining of tapestries and the beautiful colors tempted some dials, rascal to try to spoil it. For this purpose a liquid containing in solution permanganate of potash and nitrate of silver, two of the most ineffaceable stains upon cloth, was squirted with a syringe over the statue, covering it with black spots, which penetrated deeply into the soft stone. As soon as the injury was observed, a view to their repair was set on foot, and work to devise means for repairing it. An analysis of scrapings from the surface of the stained marble showed the presence of silver and manganese and the formation of a black crust. It was ascertained, since the nitrate of one and the sodium salt of the other are the only soluble compounds of them in common use. The nature of the stains being discovered, it was necessary to find a method of converting the substances which constituted them into others which could be removed from the stone, and the experiment resolved to attempt their transformation into soluble compounds. For this purpose a subsequent solution and removal by the nitrate of cyanide of potassium. In order to secure the continuous application of sulphur necessary for the complete conversion of the silver into soluble compounds, sulphate of ammonium was plastered over them, and renewed at intervals until the action was complete. The paste was then removed, and the marble washed with pure water. All the silver had been removed. Another fire-brick paste, saturated with a solution of cyanide of potassium was then prepared and applied to the spots in the same way as the first. The solution was allowed to remain until dissolved by the new reagent, and the solution absorbed by the clay, and on the final removal of the paste the spots were found to be perfectly removed.—American Architect

This in New England.

For the credit of New England it is to be hoped that Rhode Island law does not often lend itself to the perpetration of such cold-blooded, inhuman cruelty, as, hastened the death of Peter McNeil Peter, the Journal tells us, was sued for two debts. The larger one he declared he did not owe either legally or morally. The smaller was no more than a debt he had contracted of intentional fraud toward his alleged creditor. But judgments were obtained against him. A justice of the peace refused to let him leave the poor debtor's cell. Rhode Island law thus forced him to go to jail to lock up men in state prison immediately under these circumstances, provided they pay their board. Peter's creditors availed themselves of their privilege, and he was locked up in jail. He was then well along in consumption. The prison officers knew it, other people knew it, if the creditors did not know it, it was because they did not care to inform themselves. All the while he was dying, the lungs were consumptive Peter grew steadily worse. But he was long a-dying, and this spring the General Assembly, his case being brought to its notice, passed a special act, which brought the long-suffering man to take the poor debtor's oath and go free. The humane interference came too late. Peter died the other day in the prison hospital. His suffering, which had long been cruelly inflicted by blood into cash and the only satisfaction his creditors could have had must have been in weighing his dying struggles against the amount of their judgments. It is not too much to say that Rhode Islanders it would seem that a law under which such cruelty not only can be perpetrated but has been perpetrated should be modified in the interests of common humanity, to say nothing of the credit of the State.

But it might be well, before offering advice as to the removal of the mote from our neighbor's eye to make quite sure that there is no beam calling for surgery in our own. Hartford Courant

Distilling Attar of Roses.

Genuine attar of roses, remarked a New York chemist, "which is made in India and Australia, costs one hundred dollars an ounce at the places of distillation." It takes fifty thousand rose leaves to make one ounce. The roses are the common roses, and grow in great profusion in California, where the distillation of attar roses could be made a very profitable industry. I have seen some of the roses here, and just saw no dense from these roses that the odor from them on a warm sultry day caused a feeling of peculiar faintness and oppression in the passer by. This is the odor of the rose, and it is not the heat and the moist air, and is held suspended, as it were, in the atmosphere.

"There is money in this cause of faintness and indolence, but in this country of our own sweetness, the value of the flower of the rose is lost in the desert air. In Northern India the roses are regularly cultivated. They are planted in rows in fields, and require no particular care. When they begin to bloom, the leaves are cut off, and the work is done by women and children, who seem to regard it more as a pleasure than a pursuit of labor. The roses are distilled in twice the usual quantity, and the attar is allowed to stand over night, being covered up with cloths to keep out dirt and insects. In the morning the water is poured off, and the attar is skimmed off with a fine feather and dropped into vials. The process continues daily until the bushes cease to bloom. So fifty cents a bushel of roses will yield one ounce of attar, which requires the distilling of fifteen hundred roses to fill an ounce vial has a right to have a good price set upon it."—*N. Y.
